BOY INSTEAD OF GIRL

A New Brunswick Woman Solves a polished silk hat of the finest quality that can be manufactured. Summers, he the Servant Question.

THE LITTLE NIGGER GETS THERE.

He Promises to Become the Successor of that Other Goddess of Liberty, the Servant Girl.

"I think," said Mrs. Henry Archibald, as she settled herself in one of the comfortable seats in the ladies' parior of the parish building to wait for the opening of the meeting of the New Brunswick Married Women's guild, "that I have got right down to the bottom of the hired girl ques-

"Oh, dear, I wish I could say as much!" responded Mrs. Oxtoby, with a sigh.
"Have you secured that perfect jewel of a girl we have been looking for all our lives." "No, I have not. I have got down so far that I have no girl at all."

"No girl at all!"
"None at all, Pve got a boy—a little col-

"Good gracious! Why, of what earthly use to you is a little colored boy? What

"Well, that is pretty hard to say. I have only had him three days, and during that time I find that he can do anything I tell him to do, and a good many more things that I don't want him to do. But, do you know, I rather like 'the little moke,' as my husband calls aim. He is a new sensation and keeps us all alive."
"Where did you get him?"

"The other morning when Mr. Archi-bald was going out I said to him: Henry, that last girl has gone off. I wish you would send me a little boy to carry coal and sweep the pavement. Neither Ma-tilda nor I is able to do such things, and wouldn't want to if we were able. About 9 o'clock that morning a little, short, chubby, bullet headed, bright eyed colored boy came into the out kitchen where Matilda was making an effort to wash the breakfast dishes. The first thing heard was Matilda in argument with

"I thought it was time to interfere, and went out. Matilda had broken the broom over him, and the boy was backed up in a corner preparing to ward off an attack with the rolling pin. I told Matilda to de-sist, and asked the boy what he wanted. 'Gemman downtown done tole me to come heah to wuk."

"'Was it Mr. Archibald?"

"'Dunno, ma'am. He were a fat, four-eyed man, an' he had done slipped froo his 'That must be your father,' I said to Matilda. She giared at the boy, who dodged and threw up his hands as if experting a blow. "What is your name?" "Silas Moorehouse, ma'am. My mam-ny lives on Cream ridge, an' I'se a strong boy for 12 years old,' he rattled off as if he were saying a lesson. 'I'll do anything you wants, ma'am, cose I'se willin' to wuk an I'se offic hungry."

"'Poer little soul!" said Matilda, 'he shan't be hungry around here,' and in a minute she had a big piece of pie in the Well, the boy ate his pic, carried coal, finished washing the dishes, swept up the hitchen and cleaned up the yard. Then he had his dinner, and was washing up the dishes again when there came a prolonged whistle from the alley alongside the house. "'Scuse me a minute,' said Silas and ran out. In a second there was a terrible fight going on outside the alley, with noise igh for a dozen people in a row. I nearly fainted, thinking somebody was going to be killed from the noise they were making, but Matilda went out and leaned on the fence. In five minutes Silas had sent his adversary howling out of the alley, and Matilda came in holding Silas at arm's length to keep his nose from bleeding on her dress. She put his head under the hydraut, washed his face, bathed his nose and finally got the bleeding stopped. MAKES HIMSELF SOLID.

"'Silas, you're a young hero,' said Ma-tilda soothingly. 'You licked him, didn't you?" Course I did. I ain't gwine to have no wuffless young niggals a foolin' aroun' my place of business.'

"From that time Silas was Matilda's friend. He did his work well, and appeared happy over it, for he whistled until he made my head ache, and when he polished the stove he did it with two brushes, beating time with noise enough for a drum "The first night when the work was done I said to Silas: That is all to-night.

You can come tack about 7 o'clock in the morning,' and I gave him fifty cents. He gave me a strange, wistful look, and sayting the kitchen door softly after him. I thought no more of the matter until I came down in the morning to find Silas sitting in front of the stove with his feet in bucket of hot water and Matilda giving 'What is the matter with Silns?' I asked

'Nothing much, mother,' she answered,

'only I found him nearly perished with cold out in the woodshed, where he has been all night.' 'Why, child,' I said, 'why did you not

""I isn't gwine home no moah."

"'Why, Silas? Why won't you go home?"

"Ef I go back to de ridge dey'll club me and take my fifty cents away. "Gradually I got the boy's story from him. His father and mother were both dead, and he had no home in reality. The story he had told me about his mother on Cream ridge had been taught him by the idle and worthless colored people who sent him out to hunt work and took his money from him whenever he carned any. The second night Silas slept in a warm bed in the garret, and was the first one up in the house in the morning. When Matilda came down he had a roaring fire in the kitchen, the kettle boiling and the front pavement swept. He told her confidentially as he took his half dollar out of his mouth and handed it to her:

"T'se nevvah gwine away from heah no moah. I'se done 'dapted you and you mother an' you fodder, an' I don't need no wages.' "-New York World.

A vivid recollection of having been vac-cinated when she was more than a year old instead of in early infancy had given her a dread of doctors. She had a sore throat. The doctor was sent for, He came at bedtime (always a somewhat diffi-cult hour for a child). Shoemaking as a Trade.

The shoemaker who takes an apprentice binds him for at least three years, and some of them for four or five. In most cases the apprentice is expected to board with his employer. His first year's pay will be anywhere from $25 to $50, as may be agreed upon. A journeyman gets all the way from $7 to $12 per week. The average is not over $10. It is not a good trade to learn.
